ABOUT THE COURSE

Necessity and importance of Safety and Health (S & H) Management has been well appreciated and accepted in India to pursue the objective of prevention of accident. Many statutory guidelines, standards and codes are available for enhancing safety and health performance.

Safety awareness among employees is increasing, which needs to be channelized positively and effectively for achieving the organizational objectives. However, in today's era of globalization, there is a demand to transcend lagging indicators and work towards leading indicators. This is possible only when concerned employees are performing a leadership role.

Strong leaders recognize that excellence in safety and health drives business results. They promote a culture of safety in their organizations, and integrate prevention measures into business strategies, processes and performance measures.

Interpersonal trust between leaders and workers is important for many organizational variables such as quality of communication, performance and co-operation. People work more safely when they are involved in the decision-making process, have specific and reasonable responsibilities and have immediate feedback about their work.

In view of the above, the National Safety Council has developed this 2-day programme on Leadership Development for Safety and Health.
